DELIVERING NHS &
PUBLIC SECTOR MENTAL HEALTHCARE SERVICES

“As an NHS Mental Health Trust, we approached Claimont in partnership with our NHS Clinical Commissioning Group’s Head of Mental Health Commissioning. Our local mental health services and staff were under significant pressure and we wanted to maintain the delivery of high-quality services to our patients and improve system flow.

Within a matter of days, the Claimont team had put in place a community-based reablement service to both reduce admissions by offering appropriate care in the community and support the discharge of patients back into the community with tailored care plans. Thanks to Claimont’s ability to rapidly mobilise a patient-centred, community-based mental health service so quickly, system pressure was relieved and we were able to maintain the delivery of high quality mental health services.”

“With over 10 years experience of delivering community-based mental healthcare services, many of the Claimont team have previously worked within the NHS or wider public sector as clinicians, senior operational managers and commissioners. As such, we believe in the values of working together for the benefit of patients, a commitment to quality of care and delivering our mental healthcare services and treatment with compassion.

Claimont understands the NHS and public sector, it has the utmost respect for its staff, it is also sensitive to the daily challenges mental health service delivery and commissioning can present. Whilst we could never replace the amazing mental healthcare services the NHS and public sector provide, we do work in partnership, providing rapid, high-quality service provision and also support to complex individual cases, when additional assistance is required.”
